

Good morning Will C. Wood. This is Mr. Porter with the morning announcements followed by the quote of the day.

Students, you have begun to receive textbooks and instruction as we have begun our school year in earnest. While it is important that you do well on tests, it is imperative that you complete your homework each night to ensure success on those exams.

Students, here's a principal assignment. Within the next week, ask one of your teachers about the difference between doing homework and studying. High Achieving students understand this difference and successfully navigate between the two.

Students we also have a special lunch time treat today. In Room M-29 you can see and listen to President Barak Obama's message to students. It's a great opportunity to hear the President speak directly to you. Again, it will be in Room M-29 during both lunch periods.

Our High Achiever Pledge

I am a High Achiever

I listen

I learn

I ask questions

I use my memory

Quote of the day:

" There was the child who complained because he had no shoes...until he saw the child that had no feet" High Achievers are thankful for what they have, not what they want.
